DRESS CODE @ VOLTAGE

Posted on May 18, 2011 by J. PAT Email

Illustratrix Danielle Festa is what the type of people who end their names in acronyms would call a "conceptual realist." Which means that while you spent the last six hours and a half hours trying to upgrade your hydroponics system in "Pot Farm," Festa's been conceiving of new ways to make things more real. Yup, she is one-upping reality. Us normal-types have a word for that, too: balls. Festa's latest, Dress Code, opening over at gallery au lait Voltage Coffee, is a series of portraits that are made in part with the clothing of its subjects. Suck it, perception.

About Us

Founded in 1999, the Weekly Dig is Boston's best and only weekly entertainment magazine. Always witty, never dull, the Dig, as it's affectionately known, is truly the cure for what's ailing the curious mind.
